Just published in paperback is an autobiography by Dawn Young which I wish to give mention to simply because it contains some local memories of The Bakers Arms in 1963.

Dawn writes:

"November 23rd the day of The Stones concert arrived. We all met at the bus going to the east end of London getting off at the Leyton Baths we felt the excitement of the crowd. It was electric and rushed out and engulfed us. The air smelt of petrol, two stroke diesel oil, fish n chips and beer fumes from the surrounding pubs"

This is a very good description Dawn provides us with of The Bakers Arms in 1963. But Dawn also gives great mentions of the early Stones in action and several mentions of 'yours truly'. Dawn writes:

"Alan often went with Bronny to Soho to listen to The Blues. Alan was everything proper English parents feared" that's true!

The book itself "takes readers on a journey into the early beginning of The Stones, she was one of the women courtesy of Brian Jones who found herself pregnant and alone. It also explains how forced adoption was all too common in that era. The author is a survivor who overcame abuse and losses to experience eventual love and joy". Dawn however, has paid me the greatest honour I have ever had for she writes at the beginning of the book "To Bill Wyman: for his advice and friendship" and below that " To Alan Miles: for his memories"
